ABOUT ME

Hello there! I'm Jabir Omar, a software developer with a diverse journey that has shaped both my skills and worldview. I embarked on my educational journey from the vibrant city of Jigjiga, where I laid the foundation of my learning journey from kindergarten to grade 5. The city of Addis Ababa became my academic hub during the crucial years from grade 5 to 8. Later, I returned to Jigjiga to complete my high school education, adding a personal touch to my academic narrative. My quest for knowledge then led me to the bustling tech hub of Nairobi, Kenya, where I pursued my university studies and further honed my skills through a rigorous coding bootcamp. Upon emerging from the coding crucible, I embraced my role as a software developer at CelluTech, a dynamic privately-owned company. Here, I've had the privilege of contributing to innovative projects and collaborating with a talented team. My journey reflects not only my academic and professional growth but also the rich cultural tapestry that has influenced my perspective. I approach each coding challenge with a blend of technical acumen and a global mindset, fueled by the diverse experiences that have shaped my path.
